

Supported Employment

Getting a job makes it easier for people to live on their own in the community, so it is important that people with intellectual disabilities who are living on their own are able to find work.

“Supported Employment Services” are services that give people with intellectual disabilities whatever kind of help they need to find and keep a job.

They can provide services like job training, transportation between work and home, job supervision and more.

The employment section of the web site has a lot of information about supported employment.

The section called “best practices” has information on good supported employment services and links to their websites.

The section called “useful links” has links to other websites with more information on supported employment.
